NOVEMBER: GIVING THANKS

ISSUE 11 | 2023

Greetings,

As we embrace the cozy warmth of autumn, we extend heartfelt gratitude to each family in our community. In this season of giving thanks, our focus turns to the enriching moments shared with our little ones at home.

This month on the blog we give Thanks with Little Ones: Embracing the joy of gratitude, we explore simple and meaningful ways to incorporate thankfulness into our daily routines. From expressing gratitude during meals to creating a gratitude jar as a family project, we'll discover together how these practices can nurture a spirit of appreciation in our children. Read more on our blog.

Give thanks, play and Shout!

Including Your Child in Family Activities:

As the season unfolds, consider involving your child in various family activities. Encourage them to sit with the family during gatherings, fostering a sense of togetherness. Whether it's a cozy storytime, a family discussion, or a shared meal, these moments provide valuable opportunities for your child to observe and absorb communication patterns.

Kitchen Adventures: Invite your little one into the heart of the home – the kitchen! Let them participate in age-appropriate tasks like mixing, pouring, or even just observing as you prepare meals.

Sharing Family Traditions: Take this season as an opportunity to share your family's unique traditions. Share stories, explain the significance, and make these traditions a shared experience that contributes to your child's understanding of their family and cultural identity.

The Power of Shared Learning: Remember, the more you include your child in these activities, the more they learn. Through observation, participation, and shared experiences, they absorb not only the details of the season but also essential communication skills.
